2021: The Labour Market Year-in-Review

December 2021

www.labourmarketonline.com/lmiworkshop

It's a whole new labour market!

Data going into the pandemic will have very little relevance in the year 2022. The gig economy has exploded, automation and new working arrangements are transforming workplaces and while some occupations are struggling to regain pre-pandemic levels, other occupations have grown by twenty to thirty per cent.

This year's BC Labour Market Year-in-Review Workshops will focus on occupational projections, industry outlooks and recently released data and research. All material will be presented with a specific focus on the community where we are presenting.

NOTICE: While we had hoped to offer these workshops in-person, with a growing fourth wave and increased restrictions we've decided to only offer these workshops online. This will allow all participants to get very local labour market research that applies to their specific region and in their town or city.
